How will I study?

This vocational course focuses on developing skills and knowledge required to work within the travel and tourism industry. A key element of this course is the work experience period.

A variety of subject modules are delivered in taught lessons and tutorial support which aim to build a strong foundation for the development of a wide range of management skills necessary for operating within this rapidly growing and diverse industry. A strong commitment towards the work-based element will be evident throughout the period of study.

Some subject modules (such as data handling, people management and law) form the core of the course; other modules are chosen by the student to develop management skills in specialist areas such as conference and events, heritage, travel and tourism.

How am I assessed?

The majority of assessment is through assignments and time-based assessment set by the course tutors. Assessments are designed to provide reliable and appropriately challenging opportunities to develop and demonstrate work-related knowledge and skills.

What can I do after the course?

You can progress into employment within the travel and tourism industry, or to professional courses, or the achievement of the Foundation Degree in Travel & Tourism Management allows direct entry to an Honours Degree at the University of Portsmouth.
